Abstract

Method for Operating a Data Processing Device while Using Compressed Data

The invention describes a method for operating a data processing device while using compressed data, wherein a non-compressed boot program is loaded into a volatile working memory, which initiates a copying process of a compressed application program from a data memory into a volatile working memory with simultaneous decompression of the application program.

(Fig. 1)